

Way too beautiful

Madeira. Belongs to all

The sea and Nature of Madeira and Porto Santo offer sceneries of incomparable beauty and are also the perfect stage for physical and sporting activities throughout the year, for both professional athletes and those who simply want to challenge themselves.

The archipelago of Madeira brings together some of the highest peaks in Portugal, a sub-tropical forest that is a UNESCO World Heritage Site - Laurissilva - and over 1000 km of interconnecting trails and 'levadas' - man-made irrigation channels. Explorers will find in Madeira's nature the perfect setting to put themselves to the test on challenging trail running, mountain biking and canyoning routes, for example.

At sea, its transparent waters with mild temperatures all year round allow practising a range of nautical activities on both islands.

Protected natural reserves and remarkable biodiversity elevate the scuba diving and snorkelling experience, and the excellent wind and swell conditions that characterise our coast make sports such as sailing, surfing and windsurfing increasingly popular.

The islands of Madeira and Porto Santo are renowned adventure destinations, also due to the fact that they host competitions included in several renowned international circuits.

Be sure to explore the best of our Nature and sea!

A man in a grey t-shirt, black shorts, and orange sneakers is captured mid-jump over a rocky stream. In the background, a waterfall cascades down a lush, green, rocky cliff. The scene is set in a dense forest with vibrant green foliage.
